Wedding Vow Tips The Highlight Reel Technique

- 1. Your Love Story as a Movie: If a director came to you today and asked you to write a movie about your love story, what scenes from your relationship would you most want to include? Write down each scene on a piece of paper.
- 2. Scene Analysis: Now, ask yourself why you chose those scenes. Think beyond the details of the scene to the emotions behind the scene. How did your partner make you feel in that moment? What was it about that scene that made it so special? When did this scene take place in your relationship, and how did it influence your relationship in the future?
- 3. Scene Organization: Movies aren't always linear, and neither are vows. So, how you organize your "scenes" is entirely up to you. The most popular flow for vows is listed below, but just like the movies, you can follow any flow that feels most authentic.
 - a. How we met
 - b. What you love most about them/ how they've changed you for the better
 - c. Hopes for the future
 - d. Vows/Promises
- 4. A Splash of Movie Magic: In every well-written movie, there's something in the plot that makes it stand out and feel unique. The same should be said for your vows. For example, if you're both into Marvel movies, perhaps you choose analogies for how your relationship is like the Avengers. Or, if you both love music, include a line from your favorite song. The options are endless!
- 5. Write for Your Audience: Luckily for you, that's one person: your spouse! Don't worry about what your friends or family will think or how long it's taking. Just write for the person you love; you can't go wrong.
